Task Force recommendations aim to elevate Michigan's standing as a leader in recycling, while improving the state's Beverage Container Law

LANSING — Local recycling programs would receive a much-needed boost and retailers would have time to prepare for any expansion of the state's Beverage Container Law under recommendations released today by the Michigan Beverage Container and Recycling Task Force, announced Sen. Michelle McManus (R-Lake Leelanau).

The recommendations, the culmination of nearly 10 months of work, outline one of the most comprehensive recycling efforts to be undertaken by any state, and are the first in-depth review of Michigan's beverage container law since it was initiated by voters in 1976.

"Michigan is a recognized leader in many areas – water quality protection, urban revitalization, and Great Lakes issues – there is no reason why we cannot also be a leader in recycling," McManus said.

Titled, "The Citizens' Agenda: An Action Plan to Improve Recycling and the Beverage Container Law," the report recommends more than 40 legislative proposals aimed at increasing Michigan's recycling rate which, currently at 20 percent, is among one of the worst in the nation and dead last among neighboring Great Lakes states. The task force also recommended a statewide advisory council should consider structural and funding-related issues created by the beverage container law before mandating its expansion.

Commissioned by Senate Majority Leader Ken Sikkema, the task force held nine public hearings across Michigan.

Highlights of more than 40 proposed legislative initiatives made in the task force's recommendation include:

- Creating a new Recycling Advisory Council to guide future recycling programs and ensure that the state maintains an aggressive stance on recycling.
- Adding a new $3 per ton surcharge on certain solid waste in order to generate over $50 million annually in funding for local recycling programs.
- Staging a statewide anti-litter campaign and promoting other educational efforts to instill a recycling ethic in Michigan citizens.
- Enacting a new strategy for more landfill bans as an incentive to recycle and a way to further control the type of solid waste entering our landfills.
- Crafting a series of tax credits to spur recycling investment and taking steps to help create new markets for recycled products.

Task force members were also quick to point out that new directions are called for in improving the state's current beverage container law, otherwise known as the bottle deposit law.
